Bleachers may threaten view

By Mark Miller
assistant news editor

More bleachers may be built for football spectators — blocking the view of the traditional hillside observers.

Additional seating behind the north end zone in Madison Stadium could be completed by next fall.

Bids for the construction must be received by Oct. 23. Dean Ehlers, athletic director, said, "If the price is anywhere in the ballpark, we'll go through with it."

Ehlers said the seating would provide more seats for special games and bring in additional revenue.

The stadium's capacity is 15,000. The attendance at the last two home games has been 9,700 for Delaware State and 8,300 for William and Mary.

"Every year (on Parents' Day) we have to put seats down there. Hopefully we'll have a need for them for all games in the future," Ehlers said.

The bid has two parts. The first is for a center section that would be 70 feet wide and 26 rows high. The addendum to the bid is for two side sections, each about 36 feet wide and 20 rows high.

The new seats would be aluminum rather than the wooden bleachers used for temporary seating.

Ehlers said it is possible that only the center section will be constructed, depending on the price, but it would look better to have all three sections.

Construction could begin as early as November, when the stadium is used the least, Ehlers said.

He said he could not estimate how much the proposed seating would cost.

Several alumni have expressed opposition to the proposed seating, he said. He thinks they don't want the activity on the hill to be disrupted.

games. Because they are outside the stadium, alumni do not have to purchase tickets to see the game.

Ehlers said the additional seating would most likely obscure the view from the outside, and "I would hope that the people who are on the bank would join us in the stadium," he said.

Dan O'Donnell, a 1960 JMU graduate and chairman of the alumni committee of the Board of Visitors, said students who sat on the hill in college probably like to sit there as alumni.

Student named to Board of Visitors

By Bill Goodykoontz
news editor

A JMU senior has been chosen as the first student member of the Board of Visitors.

John Noftsinger, a political science/public administration major, will be presented to the board as the candidate, said Fred Hilton, university spokesman.

"There was a committee that interviewed potential choices. This is their recommendation," Hilton said.

The selection problem was "intense. A lot of the people (other nominees) were my friends," Noftsinger said. After several interviews, he was selected.

He has a 3.3 quality point average, is head resident of Weaver Hall and co-chairman of the state resident advisor conference. He also is a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity. "I do a little bit of everything," he said.

Noftsinger said, "I'm really honored. I'm excited. It's a unique opportunity to be the first."

He said he has known for about three weeks that he is the nominee. He also has read a book about the board and met with the rector, Dr. James Taylor.

Noftsinger said his main goal is to improve communication between the board and students. He would do this by meeting with the major groups on campus.

H. Dan O'Donnell committee chairman was disappointed at the number of applications that were received. "Thirteen is nice, but when you have a student body of about 9,000, I would have expected more."

Homing in on activities

A wide variety of activities are on tap for JMU alumni returning to campus Saturday for Homecoming.

The Homecoming activities include a Saturday afternoon football game between the JMU Dukes and the Huskies of Northeastern University. The game begins at 2 p.m. in Madison Stadium.

This will be the first time JMU and Northeastern have met.

Following the football game, the JMU basketball team will be in action in the Purple and Gold game — an annual intrasquad contest.

The Purple and Gold game will be held in the JMU Convocation Center. There will be no admission charge.

Three major alumni awards will be presented Saturday morning at a breakfast meeting in Chandler Hall.

H.D. "Dan" O'Donnell of Harrisonburg will receive the Alumni Distinguished Service Award; Anna Keller of Raleigh, N.C., will receive the Alumni Distinguished Achievement Award; and Karen Gamble of Syracuse, N.Y., will receive the Young Alumni Award.

Homecoming activities will actually begin on Thursday with a pep rally at 8:15 p.m. in the stadium. Friday's activities include shows in JMU's Sawhill, New Images and Artworks galleries. The galleries will also be open Saturday afternoon.

Also Friday, the Homecoming dance will be held at 8 p.m. in Godwin Hall.

Saturday's program begins with reunion brunches being held by former resident advisors, former band members and nursing alumni.

Open houses will be held in Carrier Library, residence halls and the home economics department, all beginning at 9 a.m. Also at 9 a.m. the fifth annual run-swim biathlon will be held. The competition is open to JMU alumni, students, faculty and staff.

The planetarium show, "A Comet Called Halley," will be presented at 10 and 11 a.m. in Wells Planetarium in Miller Hall.

Tailgate parties are scheduled before the football game by the Class of 1983, the Class of 1984 and Business School alumni. Luncheons in Gibbons Hall will be held by the Classes of 1959 and 1979.

Post-game parties will be held by former social work students and by journalism alumni. The Classes of 1959 and 1979 will hold reunion banquets Saturday evening.

On Sunday, alumni activities include a baseball game between the JMU Dukes and an alumni team. That game begins at 1 p.m. in Mauck Stadium-Long Field.

The JMU soccer team will play George Mason University at 2 p.m. and the Sawhill Gallery will be open from 1 to 5 p.m.

Homecoming activities will conclude Sunday night with an 8 o'clock performance in the JMU Convocation Center by comedian George Carlin.

is because they can get away with drinking beer there.

O'Donnell said he has mixed feelings as both an alumnus and a member of the Board of Visitors, but he said the most important thing is to fill the stands and support the team.

He said additional seating would be a good idea if it would help get more students in the stadium.

Elmers said contractors may ask why JMU needs additional seating when it doesn't usually use what seating it has now.

"You've got to dream big in this business and believe we're going to do that (fill the stadium for every game)," he said. "We need the support of the alumni. If we're going to expand, we need additional revenue."

A similar addition recently was made at the University of Georgia, where students also watched football games from a hill with railroad tracks.

There was a "tremendous demand" for tickets, so the stadium was enclosed in 1981 and had about 20,000 seats added, said Greg McGarity, administrative assistant for the athletics department of the University of Georgia.

The stadium, now horseshoe shaped, has 82,000 seats.

Students at University of Georgia also used to watch games from a bridge at the open end of the stadium, but that was restricted for safety reasons.

From the bridge, students threw bottles and other objects and created a hazard, McGarity said.

Kim Simon, who photographs football games for the University of Georgia's student newspaper, said "everybody got furious" when they couldn't watch games from the railroad tracks, because it was a tradition.

Sketches please dean

Arts building on schedule

By Bill Goodykoontz
news editor

The preliminary sketches for the new fine arts building are in — and the dean of the school of fine arts and communications is pleased.

"Communication is my discipline, not music or the arts," said Dr. Donald McConkey, "but I was absolutely bowled over when I saw the design. I think that for a non-musician to be excited over this building it must be good."

The new building, scheduled for completion in 1987, will probably cost about $8.2 million, he said. This is $1.2 million over the state's allocation of $7 million. "Of course, all of this is preliminary. It's subject to bid," he said.

If the university can't get the extra money a planned recital hall won't be built. "I don't even want to think about that. It's a tremendously important facility," he said.

"It won't be fatal. It just won't be ideal."

Part of the funding problem is the state's formula, McConkey said. Under this formula it costs about $90-95 per square foot to construct a building. A music building costs about $115-125, however, because of the acoustic considerations and other things.

The building is scheduled to be about 60,000 square feet, but about 20,000 of that will be for support areas, including hallways, bathrooms and duct work, he said.

"You lose space. None of that (support areas) contributes to the academic function, but you have to have it."

The sketches were drawn by the architectural firm of Marcellus Wright, Cox and Smith, which has designed buildings at the University of Richmond, Washington and Lee University and Virginia Tech.

It was chosen this summer by a committee consisting of McConkey; William Merck, vice president for business affairs; George Marcum, physical plant director; Dr. Joseph Estock, head of the department of music; and Charles Wampler, a member of the JMU Board of Visitors.

The firm was chosen over 20 other applicants.

"They were very, very sensitive to the appearance of the campus," McConkey said. "Mr. Edward Smith had taken photographs of the campus, and you could tell he had fallen in love with it."

"We're still looking at things, still making changes, still checking out materials," he said. "Plans are now to try to bid the building next spring."

The design of the building will have to be approved by the state in a "long process," he said.

The building will not close off the quad area. It will be located across from Duke Fine Arts Center where Alumnae Drive is now. It will be east of the quad area.

"There was talk about losing the quad, and there are arguments for that, but that's really Madison's trademark," he said.

The building as now designed will have no obvious front or back, he said. "It will look like three buildings" and will incorporate the design of the buildings around it. For example, the side that faces the quad area will have a more traditional design, while the side that faces Duke Fine Arts Center will be more modern.

In addition to the recital hall, the building will also house classrooms, rehearsal halls and a recording studio. The office of the dean of fine arts and communication is also scheduled to be in the new building, but with the funding problems "it's about half in and half out," he said.

Two pizza deliverymen assaulted

By Sandy Stone
staff writer

A man was assaulted while delivering pizzas to a South Main Street dormitory, campus police reported.

The incident, in which a man attempted to steal two pizzas a Four Star Pizza deliveryman was carrying, occurred about 11:15 p.m. Oct. 10 in front of Glick Hall, a men's dormitory behind the Lambda Chi Alpha and Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity houses.

The deliveryman, a JMU student, was not injured.

Police have no suspects, but the case is under investigation. The man who attempted to steal the pizzas was described as white, 5'7", 160 pounds and blonde. The man was wearing a white T-shirt and blue jeans at the time of the incident, police said.

The victim allegedly was approached by a man in front of Glick Hall. The man grabbed two pizzas from the victim and started to run, police said. The victim ran after the man, who then threw the pizzas on the ground.

When the victim told the man to pick up the pizzas, the man allegedly struck him on the head. The two then got in a scuffle and the victim struck the man several times on the face, police said. The man fled after the short brawl, police said.

A similar incident recently was reported to Harrisonburg police in which another Four Star Pizza deliveryman allegedly was assaulted when a man attempted to steal pizzas from him.

The incident occurred Oct. 7 at Ashtree Lane, city police reported. No one was injured, but the man allegedly hit the victim and grabbed the pizzas. After a struggle between the two, the man dropped the pizzas and fled, police said.

Police have no suspects in the Oct. 7 incident.

Two similar assaults occurred on campus last year involving local food deliverymen. No one was charged in either incident.

Both city and campus police label these incidents as pranks. "We've had about three reported that I can remember since places have started delivering," said Capt. M.L. Stroble of the Harrisonburg police department.

Alan MacNutt, director of campus police, said, "I don't see it as a big problem — it happened no more than two times last year.

"Students will be sitting around drinking and say, 'Hey, let's order a pizza and when the guy gets here, we can jump him and get a free pizza,'" MacNutt said. "People just view it as a prank — and it's not. It's robbery. It's a felony."

In cases of this nature, a person can be charged with assault and attempted robbery. If convicted of robbery, a violator faces a minimum five-year prison sentence and maximum life sentence, depending on the seriousness of the robbery.

If convicted of assault and battery, a first class misdemeanor, a violator faces up to 12 months in jail and-or a $1,000 fine.

Four Star Pizza managers are angered by the recent assaults on its employees. "We can't believe that some JMU students are so immature that they resort to stealing pizzas or money from a company that is doing them a service," said Ed Stenson, manager of Four Star.

"Our drivers are trained to be polite and courteous to the customers, but they have and will defend themselves if attacked," Stenson said.

Bill Eubank, assistant manager, said there have been more problems this semester with assaults on deliverymen and thefts of pizzas than in previous years. "We've had about three or four over the past couple years, but this semester we've already had at least that many. It's pretty ridiculous just for a pizza."

In addition to the Oct. 7 and Oct. 10 incidents, a couple minor incidents have occurred off campus this semester, Eubank said.

Eubank said he and other managers have considered stopping Four Star's delivery service. "But JMU is the lifeline for Four Star Pizza. It would take something really bad to happen before we would stop delivering," he said.

A spokesman for JM's Pub & Deli said JM's deliverymen have had no problems with assaults.

Eubank said, "We're on campus more and we're more visible because of our company cars. JM's guys are just in and out on their mo-peds. Because we're there more than just about anybody, it increases the percentage of something like this happening."

Southern scholar sees dire situation now

By Bill Goodykoontz
news editor

A member of one of the most important movements in Southern literary history said Tuesday that the situation of the common man is "worse now than I thought it could possibly be."

Andrew Lytle, 81, a member of the Fugitive-Agrarian movement that reshaped Southern literature, said in an interview that it is "impossible" to have a small farm now.

He was here as a visiting scholar. "Everything is on a money economy," he said. "If it's all on money economy the (small) farm cannot do it."

Lytle, who has farmed, said he was fairly self sufficient and grew his own food and made his own fuel.

Today we are more dependent on outside sources, he said. "Suppose we couldn't get oil. We'd starve to death."

Lytle, along with 11 others, including such notable literary names as Donald Davidson, Alan Tate and Robert Penn Warren, published "I'll Take My Stand" as a protest. After the Civil War "we thought we were taken back into the Union. We weren't, you see. There was the same old prejudice."

Lytle said that while they chose the name Agrarian "it was the whole European inheritance" they were fighting to preserve. This included the family unit, which Lytle said he believes is "the strength of that (Southern) society."

"We were defending the yeoman farm — that's the family size farm. That's the basis of family communities."

The book came out "in '29, about the time of the stock market crash.

We seemed prophets. We certainly didn't mean to be," he said.

However, the book didn't meet universal critical praise. "The Southern liberals ridiculed us. The people who took us seriously were the Communists."

While the situation he tried to defend has gotten worse, he said he hasn't given up hope. "There's always a remedy, but it's always particular. You can't tell until the crisis arises. You can't give up."

"It doesn't take but one bad idea to destroy a manor or a state. Our bad idea is that man can become God. They want to create life — a dog can create life. What in the hell do they want to do that for?"

Lytle said farming and writing are related, because both deal with the unknown — farming with nature and writing with imagination. However, "I must confess that I discovered you can't do both at the same time."

When writing it is best to "sit down in the same place every day at the same time. Put yourself out of this life. If the place is congenial then you do this every day."

"You only have one subject. You spend your life unfolding it."

Once a work is finished, it's finished, he said. "You should never talk about it. Let the work speak. Whatever you say is more or less than what you write."

Student poets give their work exposure

Two JMU students gave the first student reading of poetry outside of the Reading Series for Poetry and Fiction Oct. 8.

Chris Coates and Denver Butson moved outside the series, which has a student reading, to give their poems more exposure. "We felt the need to have a student reading other than the one they (the reading series) have," Coates said. "You only get 5 minutes in the student reading. I wanted to say a lot more."

Butson agreed. "At the student reading last year there was so much good stuff I wanted to hear more," he said. People approached him and told him they would like to hear more of his work, he said.

About 50 people attended the reading.

Both poets agreed the experience was favorable. Coates said, "It was great. There's really a high energy in there."

Both said they also read to help establish a precedent. Coates said this is "one of the main reasons we did it. But I don't think student readings need to be that organized."

Butson said, "We thought if we did this other people would do it. I hope it sets a precedent and I think it will."

New England May session being offered

The English department will sponsor its second May Session in New England this summer.

Eight students can participate in the three-credit class featuring a 21-day tour of such places as Mystic, (Conn.), New Bedford, (Mass.), Boston, Concord, Salem's House of the Seven Gables and colleges such as Yale (Conn.) and Harvard (Mass.).

Emphasis will be placed on literary figures of the area and trips to the home of authors such as Ralph Waldo Emerson and Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Grades will be based on a daily journal, reading assignments and a paper on a topic of interest from the visit.

Students must apply for the class, although no deadline has been set. Anyone interested should attend a meeting Oct. 24 at 4:30 p.m. in Keezell 303.

Wiffle-a-thon raises money for charity

The final score was 312 to 289 after 32 hours. The first floor defeated the second floor in the Theta Chi wiffle-a-thon for Muscular Dystrophy.

Almost the entire fraternity participated in the wiffle-a-thon that started at 8 a.m. Oct. 5 and ended at 4 p.m. Oct. 7.

Dave Nocar, Ollie Clowe, Mike Hogan and Mike Koepenick organized the game and turned a favorite Theta Chi pastime into a successful service project.

An estimated $500 was raised. The exact amount depends on how much of the sponsor money that was pledged is returned.

Theta Chi brothers described the 32 hours of wiffing as a great time. "At one point, there were enough people, music, etc. at the game that it seemed more like a party than anything else," Koepenick said.

The wiffle ball game was stopped only once. That was at 3:30 Saturday morning when the brothers stopped Harrisonburg High School students from bending the goal posts on the football field next to where they were playing.

The lack of sleep became more visible Sunday morning, where Theta Chi's started to weave from home plate to first base and back again. Some tried to run the bases to stay awake, while others took naps on the vaulting mats.

The most valuable player award was given to Mike Payne for his outstanding performance.

Software taken from Converse computer lab

By Sandy Stone
police reporter

Campus police are investigating the theft of a $695 computer software package that was discovered missing Sept. 26 from the microcomputer lab in Converse Hall.

The microcomputer software package, including two manuals and five floppy disks, was stolen between Sept. 3 and Sept. 26, police reported.

The microcomputer services department reported the theft to police Oct. 1. "In the beginning, they wanted to check all the possibilities to see if a faculty member had borrowed it or it had just been misplaced," a police spokesman said.

"But they came up with a dry hole on that, so at this point it is officially considered stolen unless we come up with something to determine otherwise," the spokesman said.

Police have no suspects in the theft, but are following "some definite leads" in the investigation of the case.

Campus police also reported the following incidents:

Drunken driving charged

► Non-student Grover L. Morris, 71, of Grottoes, Va., was arrested and charged with drunken driving about 1 a.m. Friday at Bluestone Drive near Gibbons Dining Hall, police said.

Morris also was charged with refusal to take a breath or blood test to determine his blood alcohol level, police said.

Vandalism

► About $300 damage was done to the practice field across Interstate 81 between Oct. 11 and Monday, police said.

A car apparently made ruts on the freshly seeded field with its tires, police said.

► Four tires were punctured on a car parked in the lot on Newman Drive near Greek Row, police said.

The incident occurred between 8:45 p.m. Sunday and 8 a.m. Monday and caused $130 damage.

► A stone was thrown through the glass house of the greenhouse between Carrier Library and the Health Center, police said.

The stone broke the glass of the roof and also broke some glass shelves inside the greenhouse, causing $50 damage.

The incident was reported Oct. 11, but police do not know when it occurred because the greenhouse is not now in use.

► About $25 damage was done to a vent window of a car parked in the Chandler Hall parking lot between Oct. 1 and Sunday, police said.

Someone apparently broke the window in an attempt to steal a radio and tape player in the car, police said. Nothing was stolen from the car.

► A vacuum hose was stolen and a fuel line cut on a car parked in P-lot across from Chandler Hall between 7 p.m. Oct. 10 and 9:30 p.m. Saturday, police said.

The glove box also was tampered with, but nothing was stolen from the car. Entry apparently was gained through a vent window.

The hose and fuel line are worth $3.

Thefts

► Four hubcaps were stolen from a 1966 Mustang parked in X-lot between Oct. 9 and Oct. 11, police said.

The hubcaps are worth a total of $100.

► A $90 stereo was stolen from a car parked in the lot near Chandler Hall between 9 p.m. Friday and 10:30 a.m. Saturday, police said.

There were no signs of forcible entry, but police suspect entry to the car was gained with a coat hanger.

► Two outside rear view mirrors were stolen from a Mazda parked in X-lot between 7:30 a.m. Oct. 8 and 12:10 p.m. Saturday, police said.

The mirrors are worth $20.

Judicial charge

A student was charged judicially with drinking in public about 5:10 p.m. Saturday, police said.

A judicial charge is made when university policy is broken. It is reviewed by university judicial officials. Police do not release the names of students charged judicially.

The student was charged at the football field during the high school band competition, police said.

City police reported the following incidents:

Loud noise charged

Four students were charged with creating unnecessary loud noise, city police reported.

► Scot P. McRoberts, 21, of Harrisonburg was charged about 9:45 p.m. Oct. 10 at South Main Street.

► Dennis J. Farrell, 21, of Harrisonburg; and Kurt R. Hohl Jr., 21, of Harrisonburg; and Stephen H. Jaffe, 20, of Fairfax were charged about 11:50 p.m. Oct. 10 at South Main Street.

Airs above the ground

The Original Hermann Royal Lipizzan stallions from Austria, famous for executing ancient war maneuvers that now are a lost art, performed at the Harrisonburg fairgrounds last weekend.

More than 4,000 people attended the three shows to see about 60 horses which travel worldwide.

The white stallions, which are born black, display variations of the dressage movement, "airs above the ground."

GET TWO EDUCATIONS FROM ONE COLLEGE SCHOLARSHIP.

An education in your chosen major. And an education in becoming an Army ROTC officer. You get both with an Army ROTC scholarship.

Army ROTC is the college program that trains you to become an officer, a leader and a manager.

You take ROTC along with your other studies and graduate with both a degree and a second lieutenant's commission.

Best of all, you can put both of your educations to work right away. In today's modern high-tech Army, we need engineers, communication experts, computer specialists, and other professionals.

Our scholarships cover full tuition and required fees. They also provide an amount for books, supplies and equipment, as well as an allowance of up to $1000 each school year they're in effect.

So if you think all scholarships just provide you with a college degree, look into an Army ROTC scholarship. You'll be in for quite an education.

Musician shares talent at JMU

By Allison Colby
assistant features editor

He traded his motorcycle for an English horn in junior high school and has been making music ever since.

Thomas Stacy, now the New York Philharmonic's principal English horn player, helped kick off JMU's 1984-1985 Fine Arts Series with the JMU Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night in Wilson Hall auditorium.

Though his specialty is the English horn, Stacy did not begin his musical training with the woodwind instrument.

"I started playing the piano, then the violin," Stacy said in an interview after the performance. "The clarinet was the first woodwind instrument I played. Then I switched to the oboe. And in junior high school, I sold my motorcycle and bought my English horn — the ultimate sacrifice."

Since junior high school, Stacy's talents have come a long way. He has been referred to as "a poet among craftsmen" by well-known composer Leonard Bernstein.

Stacy said he played in the Arkansas All-State High School Band with Ben Wright, now a JMU associate professor and director of the symphony orchestra. "But it doesn't matter what year that was," he said with a grin.

Two years ago, he received an invitation from the music department to perform here. He said he decided to accept because he wanted to perform with JMU students.

"There are not thousands asking me to perform with them," Stacy admitted. "And coming here was a long term arrangement."

During the concert, Stacy performed solely on English horn, but his virtuosity extends beyond his primary instrument.

Besides the English horn, Stacy plays the oboe and the oboe d'amore, an instrument similar in shape to the English horn but smaller.

Stacy performed two selections with the orchestra — "The Swan of Tuonela No. 3," by Jean Sibelius and "Concerto for English Horn and Strings," written for him by Vincent Persichetti.

"The Swan of Tuonela No. 3" was written in 1893 for solo English horn and orchestra. The pictorial content of the work is given in preface to the score.

"Concerto for English Horn and Strings," the other piece performed by Stacy, was first performed by him and the New York Philharmonic on Nov. 17, 1977. In 1978, the piece was awarded first prize in the Kennedy Center/Friedheim Awards for composition of best new American work.

Other composers have exhibited their respect for Stacy's talents through compositions written especially for him.

A piece for oboe d'amore, entitled "Oboe D'Amore," was written for Stacy by Jon Deak. A work for electrified English horn, "The Edge of the Olde One," was written for him by Sydney Hodkinson.

Although Stacy performs with the New York Philharmonic, the Arkansas native makes his home in Old Greenwich, Conn.

Since graduating with distinction from the Eastman School of Music, Stacy has appeared throughout the world with orchestras and as a guest artist in recital as well as a teacher of master classes.

An annual Stacy seminar is held each summer for English hornists from around the world.

Stacy said he likes to share his talents with students and especially likes to visit colleges and universities to do just that.

Movie review

'Teachers' passes test but fails class

By Brian Rawdon
staff writer

"Teachers" shouldn't teach.

When this movie tries to teach, it fails the course. But when it doesn't — when it shows the good clean fun of going to school — it passes the test.

"Teachers" is actually two movies spliced together. Neither makes a point. Neither do the two put together.

One movie is about the wacky staff and students of JFK High School and the weird things that happen to them in the course of the education process.

The other is about the responsibility a school has to teach its students, and concerns the problems that arise when a former student sues the school because its teachers failed to teach him to read or write.

However, the movie's excellent cast of leading and supporting players makes this movie better than it should be. Nick Nolte, the formerly idealistic teacher at odds with the school system, and Jobeth Williams, the lawyer pressing the suit against the school, bring in fine performances despite some low points.

At times, Nolte is in danger of becoming a self-parody with his overly hoarse voice and Tiny Tim-ish looks.

Williams is put through a ridiculous nude scene near the end of the picture that is not only out of character but tasteless.

Other cast members include Judd Hirsch the realistic vice principal who runs the school because the head principal is a nitwit. Ralph Macchio, who did such a good job in "The Karate Kid," is out of place as the school delinquent. His character is too much of a cliché to be believable.

Director Arthur Hiller weaves the narrative through bits and pieces of scenes until the very end when the plot is fulfilled.

Much of the comedy is found in the short scenes long before the climax. Here, the supporting cast carries the film. Allen Garfield, a teacher who constantly fights his class, gets bitten by one of his students. Royal Dano is hilarious as a teacher whose classes are so dull that, when he dies at his desk, no one realizes it.

Richard Mulligan gives the best performance of the film as an outpatient from a mental hospital who somehow becomes a substitute history teacher. He likes to teach by example, imitating characters from history to illustrate his lectures. Not only are his classes a lot of fun, but compared to the rest of the characters in the film, he is the only one who really has his head on straight.

The plot, what there is of it, centers around Nolte and his fight for quality in education. It also concerns his fight to convince Macchio to put in the effort to pass his courses. At this point, director Hiller gets preachy and boring.

At this point, it seems the lilting music should be cropping up in the background somewhere, but it is hard to really care because most of the characters don't care themselves.

W.R. McKinney, who wrote the screenplay, has invented some excellent and wildly diverse characters, with the exception of Macchio. But he loses his way when he tries to make a statement on the quality of education in our schools today. And his point, if there is one, is weakened by the fact that he doesn't blame anyone or suggest how things should be remedied.

Another negative point is the soundtrack. Not only is it poor to begin with, but it crops up at all the wrong moments.

"Teachers" is hilarious and somber, witty and depressing.

But the two sets of emotions that separate this film do not mesh, and, as a result, neither does the film.

OUR NURSING SCHOLARSHIPS WILL HELP YOUR MEDICAL PLANS

For senior Colleen Leonard, the high cost of tuition hasn't jeopardized her future in medicine. If you are having trouble meeting tuition, Army ROTC may have just what the doctor ordered:

An Army ROTC scholarship.

ROTC recently set aside hundreds of scholarships solely for nursing students like yourself.

Each one covers full tuition, books and other supplies, and pays you up to $1000 each school year it's in effect.

Two faces of Haley revealed

By Scott Tolley
sports editor

Off the field, Charles Haley has lots of friends and that's the way he likes it, but on the field, congeniality takes a back seat.

"I tell people, 'You're my friend off the field,' but on the field . . . you don't have friends when you're on the field," Haley said.

JMU's junior linebacker can best be characterized as having a split personality. There's Haley the football player and Haley the person.

And similarities between the two are few.

When asked to describe his style on the football field, Haley, after a moment of silence, answered "aggressive . . . very aggressive."

But for those who have watched Haley roam the field in the capacities of both an outside and inside linebacker, aggressive seems too passive an adjective. Words like vicious, malicious and intimidating appear to be more appropriate.

At 6-foot-4 and 230 pounds, Haley is somewhat ominous looking. If that isn't enough, a friendly hand shake with Haley can make one break out in a nervous sweat, as his hand, measuring close to 11 inches from thumb to pinkie, engulfs yours.

But the real reason those adjectives best fit Haley is simple enough — Haley loves to hit, and he does it well.

"I hate getting hit. I like to hit and not get hit," Haley said. "That's the main thing — if they (the coaches) didn't let me hit, I wouldn't play."

"I feel I hit hard, I can tell by the guy I hit — his reaction and the expression on his face. I like the pain part."

Haley is the type of player who is willing to sacrifice form for punishment.

"Hitting a guy straight on and stopping all his motion is what some people say is the best tackle. I don't think so," Haley said. "When you just rip them in half — I call that a great tackle. It makes me feel good. I get excited."

"It was either Delaware or Morehead State . . . I 'clotheslined' this guy. It was nice. That's what I look to get."

Haley's sadistic approach to the game has done nothing but reap him benefits.

Going into this weekend's contest with Northeastern, Haley leads the team in tackles with 83. He has been either the team leader or tied for the lead in tackles for five of the seven games JMU has played, including a season-high 21 tackles in the Dukes' upset victory over Delaware State.

As a freshman starter at outside linebacker, Haley was second on the team in tackles with 85. Last season, Haley was moved to inside linebacker midway through the season and finished with a team-high 143 tackles.

Haley has earned back-to-back preseason All-America honors and has been an All-State selection in his first two seasons.

His stats and his week-to-week performances have led Haley to be touted as the best linebacker in the state and possibly in the mid-Atlantic region.

But Haley isn't so quick to make such boasts.

"If people want to think that, they can. I don't worry about things like that," he said. "I do some things I didn't know I could do. I impress myself sometimes. I'm not going to lie — I don't put anybody over me, but I don't underestimate anybody either. If I know about anybody better than me, I find out their weakness and make it my strength."

Head coach Challace McMillin doesn't believe he's qualified to say that Haley is in a class all by himself, but he is quick to agree that Haley is the best he's ever coached.

"I haven't seen all the linebackers play. I'd imagine he's as good as any in the state. I don't think there's any better," McMillin said. "He has a lot of untapped potential. He's no where near where he could be. His best ball is ahead of him."

Which all leads to pro ball and whether Haley has got what it takes to make it.

"The coaches say I have the potential to make it. I don't know — time will tell," Haley said. "That's my goal, to be a professional football player, but I'm not going to press the issue. If anything I'll deny it. I don't want to prove myself wrong and other people wrong. I just let things work out for themselves."

But one thing the recognition, the honors and the high expectations haven't done is change Haley as a person.

Sitting there in blue jeans, an olive drab sweater and wearing his favorite blue hat, which has the initials 'CH' ironed on, Haley emphasized that he's a "down to earth" person and he plans to remain so.

"I don't change my standards," he said. "I like staying at the level I'm at — plain, ordinary and middle class. I don't feel I'm better than anyone else and no one else is better than me, so I don't try to make people uncomfortable."

Haley will tell you there are many drawbacks to being big and having the reputation he does for playing football.

"You can't help but notice it — my size. They (people) are intimidated, but they shouldn't be."

Haley

he said. "If a person is nervous around me I'll crack a joke. I tell them to be themselves 'cause I'm going to be myself."

"I like having fun and I like meeting people — just joking around with them. I like to make people feel they are special. I'm really a nice guy, unless people rub me the wrong way."

Haley attributes his personality to his upbringing, saying that his community and the people in it had a great influence on him. Haley has lived his entire life in Gladys, Va., which has a population of about 200 people. His high school, William Campbell, had only 107 people in its graduating class.

He admitted to still having strong family ties, saying that this is the reason he enjoys leading a more simple life.

But one thing bothers Haley — acceptance. He said people watch him play and think that he's the same sort of person off the field. But he likes to think of himself as two different people, and all he wants is for people to accept both sides of Charles Haley.

"Some people think because I'm big I don't have feelings. Some people don't think I'm human — I have feelings too. This is what I've been trying to say."

Women's tennis finishes 3rd in tournament

The JMU women's tennis team finished third in the 23-team Eastern Collegiate Championships in West Point, N.Y. over the weekend.

The Dukes finished with 26½ points, which placed them behind tournament-winner Syracuse (35 points) and the University of Pennsylvania (32½).

In singles action, the Dukes' Terri

Gaskill finished second as she lost in the finals to the University of Pennsylvania's Julie Sutton 6-3, 6-1. Sutton was the tourney's number one seed.

In doubles action, JMU's Susie Peeling and Lee Custer combined to win the consolation round finals.

Men's tennis

The JMU men's tennis team tied for 12th place in the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) Championships in Princeton, N.J. over the weekend.

The Dukes compiled 25 points tying them with Boston College. The 16-team tournament was won by Harvard, who totaled 121 points.

JMU's Keith Ciocco reached the consolation finals in singles play. The doubles team of Rob Smith and Kent Boerner also reached the consolation finals.

The consolation finals were forfeited by the Dukes, as the team returned home from the tourney earlier due to scheduling problems and minor injuries to several players.

Field Hockey

The JMU field hockey team tied William and Mary 1-1 in double overtime Wednesday night at Madison Stadium.

The tie extended the Dukes' (9-6-1) unbeaten streak to five games.

JMU's goal was scored by Diane Buch.

Volleyball

The JMU volleyball team, ranked 15th in the latest NCAA Division II top-20 poll, finished second in the Wake Forest Invitational Tournament held over the weekend.

The Dukes' (21-5) lost the opening match of the weekend to Appalachian State in five games, but rebounded to defeat North Carolina-Charlotte and Wake Forest, putting JMU in the finals. There, the Dukes were defeated again by Appalachian State, 15-12, 7-15, 15-11, 15-10.

Football

Special seating arrangements will apply to the Parent's Day game on Oct. 27 so JMU students may sit with their parents.

Better lighting needed

In a sense, the JMU bubble has burst.

The sexual assaults that occurred at JMU last week help to destroy the false and unsafe illusion here that people are secure so long as they're walking on campus.

They also give ground to question the baseless assumption many take while walking across campus, i.e., "I'm safe on campus so long as I'm walking with somebody I know." Police reported that in both assault cases, the alleged attackers were identified as acquaintances of the students assaulted.

These recent assaults have helped to illustrate the need to correct a very serious and dangerous deficiency at JMU.

Campus lighting is horrendous.

► Visibility at night near some areas in the village is close to nil. The walkway between Frederikson and Chappellear is particularly poor. In fact, the entire area between the triangle formed by Huffman, Dingleline and Chappellear halls is especially in need of either additional lights or light bulbs with higher wattage. This area is also dangerous because it is covered by large bushes and trees along the sidewalk.

► Greek row is another bad area on campus. The area surrounding the first block of Greek houses, which include Alpha Sigma Tau, Phi Mu and Sigma Kappa, aren't lit at all. Granted, campus police often patrol this area. However, this still doesn't help a student who trips in the dark because of poor visibility.

► Because of its large trees, the Quad is possibly the darkest campus section at night. The sidewalk area along Main Street is in need of light posts all along the street.

► D-Hall is barely lighted at all. Students walking at night from Bluestone dorms to the union or to D-hall late at night have to grope their way through darkness.

There is only so much students can do to protect themselves from attack. However, there's a lot the university can do. A better lighted campus would be the biggest deterrent to future attacks. And in the wake of last week's assaults, better lighting, now, is in order.

Debate shapes course of 1984 election

By Brian Rawdon and Danelle Duval

The preceding two weeks have brought the American public a new perspective of the presidential and vice-presidential candidates.

The nation saw the first of two presidential debates between Walter Mondale and Ronald Reagan, and the vice-presidential debate between Geraldine Ferraro and George Bush. Though both sides have claimed victory in these contests, the debate's impact on the electorate is more significant than who won or lost.

Presidential debates have the power to change the course of an election. John F. Kennedy's debate with Richard Nixon altered the 1960 presidential race in Kennedy's favor. The same is true, but to a lesser extent, of the Ford-Carter debates and the Carter-Reagan debates of the past two elections. The public exchange of political viewpoints often lends credibility to a candidate who has not been taken seriously.

Mondale is an excellent example. The very fact that he was on the same stage as Reagan gave him the credibility his campaign has lacked thus far. Reagan's consideration of Mondale as a serious candidate prompts the public to do the same. Who won the debate is only secondary in importance, although Mondale's performance alone was enough to narrow the gap between him and Reagan.

The debates allowed people to examine the candidates' images in light of their stand on the issues. For many, the Reagan-Mondale debate brought the age issue into focus. Reagan's performance wasn't as sharp as usual. Some people are now wondering if he is up to another four years in the White House. In contrast, Mondale's performance was better than expected.

The vice-presidential debate, only the second of its kind in history, was important because it gave the public a chance to compare two people who could be one step away from the presidency in the next four years.

Because Reagan is 73 years old, the public may have considered Bush's qualifications as a potential president more seriously. The age factor in this election makes the choice of a vice-presidential candidate even more important than usual.

Ferraro also draws attention to the vice-presidential candidates because she is the first female candidate from a major party for this office. The public looked at her performance in this debate to see if she could handle herself in a leadership role. She proved she could.

Aside from the tactical benefits offered by publicly debating, candidates have the chance to improve their standing in national polls. Concrete results from the Reagan-Mondale debates are already evident. The latest Harris survey shows that Reagan leads Mondale by just nine points, compared to 13 points before the first debate on Oct. 7.

The second and last presidential debate is scheduled for this Sunday. If both candidates repeat their performances, the race could tighten even further.

At Issue in '84 is a special election column featured every Monday on this page. It's being printed today due to The Breeze not publishing last Monday. This and future columns will comment on political occurrences and important issues of these last three weeks in the campaign.

Ferraro at JMU

Student's 'trouble free' game not so 'trouble free'

A few weeks ago, I was fortunate enough to do some golfing. Ready to tee off, I was relaxed and trouble free, when I suddenly felt a tug on my right arm.

"Excuse me sir," interrupted a female voice.

Huh? I turned, quite astonished to see none other than Geraldine Ferraro standing before me.

"Well Gerry, how goes it?" I asked.

"Hello. Although I'm a bit short on time, would you mind if I asked a few questions? You're a student aren't you?"

"Yes I am," I answered, "and I don't mind if you don't mind following me around the course."

frequent. There was a genuine concern for human rights."

"Yeah, but this is the 80s," I replied. "Today, kids want to make money."

I squatted behind the ball and studied the green. It looked about 20 votes. Uh, I mean 20 feet.

"Well what about student loans then?" she said. "How easy are they to come by?"

I bit my lip. Loans certainly have been a pain in the ... steady now. Concentrate on the ball.

She pressed on. "And jobs. Are they easy to find? Unemployment is much higher than it should be."

I said nothing. I had worried endlessly about finding a career after graduation. I slowly drew the club back.

"What's your major Brian?"

Damn!

The ball trickled an impressive three feet.

Guest Spot

By Brian Drury

My first swing hit smooth and solid. We started walking.

"Where do you go to school?" she inquired.

"James Madison University," I answered proudly, "a bit of a country club in its own right," I added, chuckling to myself.

"And very conservative from what I understand," she said flatly. I grabbed a six iron and approached the ball nervously. "And how will you vote in the election, Brian is it?" she asked reading my name from the score card.

"Well...I, huh..."

I felt my wrists tighten. I was faltering.

Damn!

I hooked it. The ball lay wide to the left.

"You see, Brian," she continued, "You must realize that Fritz and I stand for issues that have long been in the interests of students. Why, in my college days, campus demonstrations were rather

That did it. I wouldn't tolerate more jokes about liberal arts!

"Listen, I'm sorry but I really have to go, Ms. Ferraro. I've got to finish these nine holes and get back to the books."

"That's right," she said, apparently satisfied. "You study hard. And remember, America's future rests in your hands."

And then she left.

As I got ready to putt again, her final words came back to me. Now that's funny, I thought with a sigh of relief. There's no way I'm going to golf for a living.

This joke shouldn't be told about

The Real World

To the editor:

How someone can respond to the irresponsible statements made by Ronald Reagan with indifference, or worse, with humor, is beyond me.

It seems Keith Turner must be quite a jovial fellow indeed. His claim in "The Real World" that Reagan's remarks show personality is asinine. But if they do, I don't think we need a president with personality in the White House. Most Reagan supporters do the same thing Turner has done. They try to turn a moronic, brash comment into a laughing matter.

I personally don't think that nuclear war or the threat of such a war is humorous. I should think that the president of the United States, and anyone else with a smattering of intelligence, would feel the same way.

Anyone who wields the power of the presidency has no right to make such a "joke" at the disposal of the people he represents.

Election Economy not progress factor

To the editor:

I can't believe what little thought people are giving to this year's presidential election. I have been asking students and other adults what they think. So far, all I have heard is Ronald Reagan has improved the economy, so they will vote for him.

Tell me one thing he has done. The facts are: inflation is down due to stable food and energy prices; interest rates are down because of stricter controls on the money supply by the federal reserve; unemployment is decreasing as a result of reinvestment.

Reagan would like to take credit for all of these, but he can't. Realistically, no president can make a significant impact on an economy. However, presidents do have influence on people's lives in other ways. Look past the economy, it's unaffected. Instead, look at what each man thinks about human rights, peace, the environment, nuclear build up, and other issues the executive branch effects. On these points, vote your conscience, not your pocketbook.

Some prefer pizza for breakfast

To the editor:

Here is a list of the negative sides of JMU and Harrisonburg. Maybe somebody can do something, maybe not.

— On Saturday, students sleep late. Harrisonburg stores stay open until 5 p.m. Not much time is left for shopping. Also, the bus to Valley Mall only runs until 4 p.m.

— The food at the dining hall is usually cold. If it's hot, it's not fit to eat.

— You never find out about club meetings until the day after.

— People add insult to injury by stealing books from the bookstore after the owner has paid so much for them.

— If you're younger than 19, you can order beer from JM's by phone, but you can't in person.

— The library has no recreational books, and the research books are outdated.

— Long distance phone connections are lousy.

— The Marching Royal Dukes practice early in the morning.

— Broken vacuums in the halls — we've starting naming the dustballs.

— Couldn't construction on railroad tracks, Miller Hall entrances, and behind Hillside have been done this summer?

— Some people don't like standard breakfast food. They prefer cold pizza, dill pickles, cold chicken, etc. D-hall doesn't know this. Cold spaghetti would be nice.

— Change machines are always out of order. You need change for everything.

— Andrea Cope. If she can't handle a "Mickey Mouse" multiple choice test, she shouldn't be here.

Salads Plus better idea than more fast-food

To the editor:

It seems Salads Plus will be closing this spring, but dealing with a new fast-food operation in the Phillips Center would be even worse.

Whether McDonalds or Burger King likes it, there has been a great emphasis on nutrition and physical fitness in this country during the past decade. This emphasis is very apparent on campus with aerobics, jogging trails, intramurals and . . . Salads Plus.

The majority of the students do not want another fast-food, or should I say junk food, restaurant at JMU. An expanded Dukes Grill will serve for those who do. Why not move an improved Salads Plus, not that it needs much improvement, to the new Phillips Center.

Salvadoran talks produce few results

LA PALMA and SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — In the first meeting after five years of bloodshed and bitterness, government and rebel leaders Monday discussed ending El Salvador's war.

President Jose Napoleon Duarte called on leftist guerrillas to take part in Salvadoran elections. The rebels called for social reforms and war-crimes trials.

Although the initial meeting produced no breakthrough, they agreed to meet again in November.

The only concrete result of their talks was agreement by both sides to establish a commission including four government and four rebel representatives and to meet again in late November.

Leftist rebels announced Tuesday that they presented 29 specific demands to Duarte, a list that did not include the guerrillas' long-time insistence on powersharing.

The rebel list included a wide range of reforms, increased wages for workers and peasants, further land redistribution, removal of U.S. military advisers and military aid, and a halt to government bombing of rebel-held zones.

An estimated 59,000 people have been killed in El Salvador in the past five years as the leftist guerrillas struggled against U.S.-supported governments moving slowly from rightist military domination to democratic civilian control.

Most of the dead were civilians that were killed by right wing squads.

Duarte put a proposal on the table, offering amnesty for rebels to re-enter the political system and proposing guarantees to protect them against military reprisal.

Duarte made his surprise offer for peace talks in a speech to the U.N. General Assembly in New York on Oct. 8. The leaders of the rebel groups quickly accepted.

No armed clashes were reported Tuesday in El Salvador, but a military source said rebels downed three electricity towers in San Vicente.

Egypt asks U.S. to sell weapons

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Egypt asked the U.S. Sunday to resume selling Jordan air defense weapons.

U.S. supplies were halted earlier this year due to opposition by Israel and members of Congress.

Egyptian sources said the request was made during meetings between Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and President Mohamed Hosni Mubarak and other senior Egyptian officials.

Sources said Weinberger refused to commit President Reagan's administration to supporting the sale of Stinger ground-to-air missiles, which Egypt claims should be sold as an incentive to bring Jordan's king Hussein into the peace process with Israel.

Weinberger also refused to assure that the U.S. would meet Egyptian requests for more advanced weaponry for its own armed forces.

In March, Reagan withdrew a request to sell more than 1,600 Singers to Jordan for $133 million after Hussein blasted U.S. Middle East policy as unprincipled and pro-Israel.

Tutu awarded 1984 Nobel Peace Prize

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, black anti-apartheid leader of the South African Council of Churches, was named winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize Tuesday.

Tutu became the second black resistance leader to win the prize.

Tutu is South Africa's chief moral spokesman against the country's system of strict race separation that reserves the best schools and such for the whites and denies South Africa's 22 million blacks a voice in government.

Foreign Ministers to discuss strategy

BERLIN (AP) — Foreign Ministers of the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact plan to hold a strategy session Dec. 3-4 in East Berlin, West Germany, diplomatic sources said Tuesday.

The sources said the meeting would provide an opportunity for East European officials to "take stock or discuss proposals" following the U.S. presidential election.

NATO foreign ministers are holding their annual fall meeting Dec. 13-14 in Brussels, Belgium.

Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Poland, Bulgaria, Hungary, the Soviet Union and Romania are all members of the Warsaw Pact.

GM workers strike at nine plants

TORONTO (AP) — Workers at nine General Motors plants in Canada went on strike Wednesday demanding higher pay and more time off.

Officials said the work stoppage would force layoffs at the company's U.S. plants within a few days.

Union officials said they were unwilling to accept a pact patterned on the agreement recently ratified by GM workers in the U.S.

Bob White, the union's director for Canada, said negotiations would continue as long as there was hope for progress.

CIA produces warfare manual for rebels

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA reportedly produced a psychological warfare manual for Nicaraguan rebels instructing them to hire professional criminals for "selective jobs."

U.S. intelligence sources confirmed the CIA's role in producing the 90-page manual, written in Spanish, also urges the rebels to create a "martyr" by arranging a violent demonstration leading to the death of one of their supporters and telling how to coerce citizens into carrying out assignments against their will.

Nicaraguan Democratic Force President Adolfo Calero, said he saw the manual "less than a year ago" and that it was given only to "our top people."

He denied that the CIA produced it, claiming it was a "contribution" from a supporter whose name he could not recall.

Agent trying to investigate couple

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An FBI agent charged with espionage was seeking to ingratiate himself with a Soviet couple so he could investigate them, his attorney said Tuesday.

Richard W. Miller was trying to set up his two alleged co-conspirators and had no intention of betraying his country, said attorney Stanley Greenberg.

Greenberg said Miller was only trying to work with Soviets Svetlana Ogorodnikov and her estranged husband Nikolay, to prepare for whatever his superiors might want him to do against the couple.

Man renounces U.S. citizenship

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arthur L.H. Rudolph, who designed the rocket that took U.S. astronauts to the moon, has renounced his U.S. citizenship and left the country after the Justice Department accused him of persecuting forced laborers during World War II.

Neal M. Sher, head of the department's Office of Special Investigations, which is assigned to track down Nazi war criminals in this country, said Rudolph and his attorney had been told of the department's allegations.

Sher said there were allegations that Rudolph, while serving from September 1943 to April 1945 as chief operations director for V 2 missile production at the Mittelwerk Central Works factory participated in the persecution of forced laborers.

Alexandria man released from jail

FAIRFAX (AP) — An Alexandria man charged with abduction with intent to defile in a alleged attack on a high school freshman earlier this month has been released from the county jail, officials said Monday.

Jeffrey Lewis, 19, was released Monday morning on his personal recognizance, said Vincent Picciano, director of court services for the Fairfax County juvenile section.

Authorities said the alleged victim, a 15-year-old freshman at Fort Hunt High School, was raped during a night football game Oct. 3 after a man dragged her from a parking lot into a restroom.

No money was posted for Lewis, who was being held on $50,000 bond. Instead, the people who are taking responsibility for him will be liable for the amount if Lewis fails to appear in court for his trial, Picciano said.

Lewis is scheduled for trial Nov. 19.

Officials say poisoning killed Veracruz crewman

NORFOLK (AP) — Gas poisoning, not head injuries, caused the death of a crewman from the Veracruz I, a medical official and Coast Guard said.

The cruise ship fell Oct. 1 from its blocks in a dry dock at the Norfolk Shipbuilding and Drydock Co., injuring 31 of 145 crew members aboard.

Avery Darling, the only crew member who died, was overcome by poisonous gas after the ship fell, according to Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Christopher Walter.

Dog trainer says dogs are time bombs

NORFOLK (AP) — A professional police-dog trainer reviewed records of "automatic attacks" on people by police dogs and has concluded that the city is "putting loaded time bombs on the street."

Anthony Taff Jr. of Upper Darby, Pa., reacted sharply to numerous narrative police reports stating police dogs here had attacked without commands from handlers.

From January 1983 through last month, Virginia Beach, which has 14 K-9 dogs, had reported 79 attacks. Richmond, which has 12 dogs, reported 12 attacks.

Concern over the use of K-9 dogs in Norfolk recently prompted City Manager Julian Hirst to initiate an investigation. It was started about two weeks ago, shortly after an alleged victim of a K-9 attack filed a $6.75 million lawsuit against the city.

Simple work proves hard for Elvis

MIAMI (AP) — Elvis, the reptilian star in the "Miami Vice" television series, merely had to crawl 15 feet down a dock for his part in a scene. But even that proved too much.

The 350-pound alligator instead snapped his chain leash, ripped the tape off his mouth and plunged into Biscayne Bay for a dip Monday until his handlers roped him.

"You can't get an alligator to walk in a straight line," said George Harwell, owner of the alligator. "It's difficult any time there's water around. The logical place alligators want to be is in the water."

Woman wants Reagan to have liver checked

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — A radio station celebrating the 20th anniversary of the Free Speech Movement put an open microphone on the sidewalk and surrendered its airwaves, attracting speakers strange even for this diverse community.

KPFA radio opened its airwaves for 30 minutes with no host, no interviewer and no rules. The microphone was open to anyone who had something to say.

One woman wanted Reagan's liver examined, and a man appeared to urge people to eat each other for breakfast.
